Biographical note of Angelina Sutphen Kuhl Southard

Angelina “Angie” Sutphen Kuhl Southard was born on August 4, 1880 in Somerville, New Jersey to Elizabeth Tunison and Judiah Kuhl. Her father passed away when she was young, and her mother remarried George Washington Kline.

Angie graduated from Plainfield High School in New Jersey in 1899 and began attending Wellesley College to study music that same year. While attending Wellesley she participated in an exchange program that brought her to study at Colorado College for one year, where she met a young judge named Charles Southard.

Angie returned home and graduated from college in 1903. After graduation Angie began teaching piano at the New York College of Music. By 1905 she was working at the Metropolitan Opera where she accompanied the famous singer, Enrico Caruso. Later that year she returned to Colorado to spend time with Charles and began corresponding with him regularly.

In 1907 Angie traveled to Brazil to become a missionary teacher at her Aunt Gertrude Lukens’s mission.

On June 28, 1911, Angie married Charles Southard at her parents' home in Bound Brook, New Jersey. William "Bill" Southard was adopted in 1916 and was later followed by three children; Hal Sutphen, Edith, and Mary Elizabeth in 1918.

Angie was very active in local music in Greeley and was often referred to as the "Grand Dame" of the music scene.
