Administrative/Biographical History

Biographical note of Charles Ovid Plumb

Charles Ovid Plumb was born on August 14, 1895 in Greeley, Colorado to Emily Forster White Plumb and Augustus Miles Plumb. He graduated from Greeley High School in 1912. Charles then graduated from State Agricultural College in 1916. He married Isabella Huffsmith on December 28, 1918. The couple had six daughters: Charlotte Mundy, Marjorie O'Farrell, Barbara Hansen, Frances Dunleavy, Annabel Glenn, and Agnes Weinstein. During his life, Charles was a farmer, county commissioner, a World War I veteran, 4-H leader, Weld County Health Department Advisory Board member, and was the Weld County Agricultural Advisory Council founder and chairman. Charles died on March 17, 1997 in Greeley.

Brief History of the Plumb Family or Plumb Farms

Congress enacted the Timber Culture Act of 1873, a follow up to the Homestead Act. Through the Timber Culture Act, homesteaders could qualify for an additional 160 acres of land if they planted at least 1/4th of the property with trees. By the time Charles A. White established his tree claim in 1881, only ten acres of trees were required to be planted. White planted ash and cottonwood trees bordering each side of his property. The home originally cost $2,500 and was designed by Bessie Smith, Greeley's first female architect. The family raised farm animals and grew alfalfa, sugar beets, seed potatoes and beans, and other vegetables on the farm. Upon Col. C.A. White's death in 1922, Charles Ovid Plumb, White's grandson, purchased a quarter interest in the farm and eventually purchased the property. In 1983, the descendants of Charles Plumb donated 2.5 acres of the original tree claim to the City of Greeley for historical, cultural and museum use. Today, the property is used for community gardens, event rentals, and as a learning center.
