Administrative/Biographical History

Brief History on the Great Western Sugar Company in Greeley

Six independent sugar factories in the Northern Colorado area, all built around the turn of the twentieth century, consolidated to form the Great Western Sugar Company in 1905. By 1930 Great Western was composed of 20 factories in the Colorado, Nebraska, Montana, and Wyoming areas. For many years, the sugar beet industry was important to the economy of Northern Colorado, including Weld County. Great Western became the national leader in beet sugar production by the 1940s. Apart from sugar production, the Company also undertook agricultural research into sugar beet practices during much of its history.

In 1967 Great Western was sold to Billy White, a Colorado businessman, and sold again in 1974 to the Hunt Brothers. In 1985 after several years of declining profits and economic instability, the downsized company was once again sold to Tate & Lyle, a British sugar company. Tate & Lyle changed the company's name to Western Sugar Company. In 2002, Western Sugar was sold to sugar beet growers from Colorado, Nebraska, Montana, and Wyoming, forming the Western Sugar Cooperative. The Cooperative still operates some factories, processing plants, and storage facilities in Colorado, Nebraska, Montana, and Wyoming today. The Greeley factory was officially closed in the mid-2000s and demolition commenced in 2008. Today the Leprino Cheese Factory stands on the site.
